What this means is that if you purchase a Motorola Blur from T-Mobile, it will only work with T-Mobile. The same situation applies with all the other cell phone carriers. To use your Motorola Blur on a different network, you'll need to unlock it. After the phone is unlocked, it will work with any of the compatible phone networks.

Newer devices allowed users to defer Blur services until a later registration and had more filtering options and better battery management to optimize the user experience. In late 2010 Motorola announced that Motoblur would not be their development focus in the future, as Android made custom skins largely redundant.
