I find it difficult to consistently nail perfect focus at very shallow DOF settings (85mm@1.4) with manual focus, even AF is not always perfect with the D810 and other Nikon equipment I have. The D810 seems more consistent with nailing shallow DOF focus than the D800 I had previously, and I would expect the D850 to be better yet.

It's by far the least expensive way to get a decent 85mm f/1.4 for Nikon; it costs half of a used manual-focus Nikon 85mm f/1.4, and less than a third the price of a new Nikon 85mm f/1.4 AF lens. Much easier to get good focus with Sony cameras that have focus peaking in live view when the lens is used wide open on maximum aperture f/1.4. This lens flares a little bit and suffers from chromatic aberration on maximum aperture f/1.4. Nikon 50mm 1.4 AI lenses are usually cheap so that is good.

Has anyone compared accuracy of manual versus auto focus wide open with the 85mm 1.4 lenses or even the 50mm 1.4's? My eyesight is a bit soft these days so pinpoint accurate manual focus can be difficult. At the same time my Nikon 28-70 and 70-200 2.8 autofocus lenses regularly miss the intended point of focus at wide open apertures.
