The T763's output is rated conservatively at 100 W/ch into six channels and there was never any suspicion during the review process that NAD exaggerated the numbers. The T763 can handle the most complex sound mix with relative ease and I constantly found myself having to turn the volume down in order to avoid death by strangulation (see ...

You may spend significantly more for a piece of hardware to eek out only minor improvement. The newer model the t763 supposedly improves the overall power (as if it needed it) and lowers noise a little. Neither of these were major issues in the 762, but it's really good to see ongoing refinements being made in the NAD line.
